The soy bean is a native of southeastern Asia, and having steadily been carried west and north is now extensively grown in the United States, especially in the southern states. Several varieties have become acclimated to Illinois conditions, and this year are found maturing as far north as South Dakota. Soy beans are grown largely as a forage and hay crop, and being a member of the leguminous family they are also very highly regarded as soil renovators.—Farmers' Voice.

A western exchange says: "The plentiful supply of range, feed, and the fact that larger quantities of hay were harvested this year than ever before, has resulted in fewer lambs being sold to Colorado feeders. Last year almost every flock master in the southern part of the state sold off his lambs to the feeders, but this fall they feel that they have enough hay, both alfalfa and native, to fatten what lambs they wish to ship, and also keep their hold-overs in prime condition.

"Success," is authority for the statement that the cost of harvesting wheat on the Pacific coast has been so lessened by the use of automobiles that a greater amount of the grain can be produced at the same actual expense, than in the Argentine Republic, where labor costs only a fraction of a dollar a day. The large automobile traction engines now used in California are of 50 horse power, and are provided with driving wheels 60 inches in diameter. They do the plowing, planting and harvesting, in their proper seasons. One traction engine performs the triple work of plowing, harrowing and planting in one operation.

The Iowa agricultural college stands at the head of institutions of this kind and at the present time there are 1,000 students enrolled, but before the close of the school year, Prof. Curtis says he expects the number to be increased to 1,500. It aims to instruct its students practically in all matters pertaining to stock and agriculture. During two weeks of January each year it has been arranged to give instructions to farmers and breeders in judging cattle. Last winter the first was held and it was attended by about 300 farmers, some of them prominent as breeders of cattle, and in January, 1903, it is expected the number will be increased to 500.

The President Eats Dinner with a Nigger.

Our parents always taught us that no decent white man would eat with a nigger, and old uncle Joe (a wise old nigger) used to tell us "no decent nigger would eat with a white man." While Mr. Roosevelt and Booker T. Washington disgraced their respective races by this escapade of social indiscretion and while we would go hungry before we would condescend to dine with a coon, yet we cannot help admiring Mr. Roosevelt for his moral courage in practicing what he preaches. It has ever been the teaching of his party and in fact the republican party was originally formed for the purpose of freeing the negro from bondage and raising him to the political and social level with the white man. Then is it anything but natural, right and proper for the leader of this great party to carry out its teachings and purposes to the letter? While we deplore and feel humiliated that our nation's palace should be disgraced and tainted by such a scene as a big buck nigger sitting with our President at the dinner table. Yet we are bound to admit that no other President ever had the grit to do such a thing. But we assume the bold ground that no true republican has the right (from a political standpoint) to socially ostracize the nigger, and he who does it, is no true republican—he is partly something else. During the days of reconstruction when the "nigger Bureau" had full swing throughout the South and the carpet-baggers were teaching Sambo his rights, old Aunt Dinah was told by one of these gents that "he was as good and had the same rights as the white folks."

When she went home she proceeded at once to assert her rights to her old master and mistress. It did not take these two worthies long to convince Dinah that she was still a nigger, notwithstanding the gentlemen of carpetbag proclivities. At the first opportunity Aunt Dinah sought comfort with the "Bureau." Aunt Dinah said: "See yere boss, I wants to know how long its gwine to be fore we niggers am as good as de white folks." "Why Auntie," said the official "you are as good as we are now." "Yes boss," said Aunt Dinah, "I knows we is as good as you nawthen folks is, when am we gwine to be as good as old massa and missus, dat what I wants to know."

Mr. Roosevelt no doubt thinks that the negro is his social equal (and we believe it) but it will be a long time before he will by example or precept convince decent people that it is nice for white folks to dine with the coon.—Sterling Record.

Sit up in bed.

When it becomes necessary to sit up in bed to get your breath; when the least exertion such as walking, sweeping, singing, talking or going up and down stairs, causes shortness of breath, fluttering or palpitation; then it is time to do something to brace up and strengthen your failing heart. Take Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. It is best of all.

"My wife was so bad with heart disease that she could hardly breathe, and often had to be propped up in bed all night. Our doctors did not help her so she began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and was soon all right."

The quality dinner of President Roosevelt will result in great good to the people of the South, since it will put an eternal quietness upon the prospects of Republican proselytizing in the South, and demonstrate the necessity of its continuing as a solid stonewall for the principles and traditions which have been handed down from father to son for generations as a glorious heritage. It will serve to unite the people of the South into one solid bond of friendship with union of principles.

Eating at Bedtime.

It was formerly thought that food taken at bedtime created indigestion and bad dreams. While undoubted rich and hearty food is inappropriate at the time chosen for repose, a light nourishing repast at night often conduces to sound sleep by drawing the blood away from the brain.

Physicians are now advising a bedtime lunch for weak, nervous and emaciated people. The long hours of sleep consume about one-third of our existence. Although the demand made upon the system is naturally much less than during the waking hours, there is a wasting away of tissues consequent upon the suspension of nutriment for many hours. The body feeds upon itself, for food taken at dinner is digested at bedtime. Often one is restless and wakeful at night because the stomach is empty.

Says a well known physician: "Man is the only creature I know of, who does not deem it proper to sleep on a good meal. The infant instinctively cries to be fed at night, showing that food is necessary during that time, as well as through the day, and that left too long without it causes it discomfort, which it makes known by crying."

If you crave it, eat a light, easily digested lunch at bedtime, and the long hours of sleep will work out a problem in addition, instead of subtraction, of adipose tissue.

The Duty of Mothers.

What suffering frequently results from a mother's ignorance; or more frequently from a mother's neglect to properly instruct her daughter! Tradition says "woman must suffer," and young women are so taught. There is a little truth and a great deal of exaggeration in this. If a young woman suffers severely she needs treatment, and her mother should see that she gets it.

Many mothers hesitate to take their daughters to a physician for examination, but no mother need hesitate to write freely about her daughter or herself to Mrs. Pinkham's Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., and secure from a woman the most efficient advice without charge.

Mrs. August Pfalzgraf, of South Byron Wis., mother of the young lady whose portrait we here publish, wrote in January 1899, saying her daughter had suffered for two years with irregular menstruation—had headache all the time, and pain in her side, feet ached, and was generally miserable. She received an answer promptly with advice, and under date of March, 1899, the mother writes again that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured her daughter of all pains and irregularity.

Nothing in the world equals Lydia E. Pinkham's great medicine for regulating woman's peculiar monthly troubles. Many people are suffering fearfully from indigestion or dyspepsia, when one single bottle of Herbine would bring about a prompt and permanent cure. A few doses will do more for a weak stomach than a prolonged course of any other medicine. Price 50 cents.

"With the Legislature of Texas, composed of 90 per cent or more of lawyers, no wonder that the stockman or farmer stands no show when it comes to asking for an appropriation in the interest of agriculture. The producers of the State should have proportionate representation in our legislative halls and when this time comes, if it ever does, the great agricultural interests of the State will receive merited recognition and will be given a push forward. It is all nonsense to presume that none but a lawyer and a fourth class one at that, is competent to go to the Legislature. The trouble is, and has been, that so called lawyers who could not make a living at home fill most of the seats at Austin. The producing classes of the State have it in their power to make great improvement on the legislative timber of the past and they should do it."—Texas Stockman and Farmer.

War on Bogus Butter.
St. Louis, Oct. 21.—John H. Wilkinson, agent for the Missouri State Board of Agriculture, has opened a crusade against retail grocers for the alleged selling of imitation butter. He has brought a number of suits in the justice courts against grocers under the law relating to the matter, which provides that in case of conviction, the accused shall be assessed $50 for each offense, the fines to go to the public school fund. It is stated that Wilkinson will bring a number of other suits, in all about 100.

The last batch was brought in Justice Houghton's court, and Saturday Deputy Constable Thomas McAlvy and Patrick O'Donnell finished serving the defendants with notices to appear in court and answer to the charges.

The defendants are charged with unlawfully selling, keeping for sale and offering for sale a certain imitation butter, composed of certain substances compounded with butter, and colored so as to resemble genuine yellow butter.

DOC ANDERSON

Doc Anderson.

Louisville, Ky., October 22.—In the Courier Journal today Henry Watterson editorially discusses President Roosevelt's dinner to Booker T. Washington. He says in part:

"Each American, whether native or of African descent, has the right to pick his company, to sit at the table with whomsoever he will, and, if it pleases the president to dine one or a dozen gentlemen of color at the White House—unofficially mind you—that is nobody's business."

Nevertheless, and, at the same time, there are certain conventionalities—call them prejudices if you like—it were well for all men, and particularly for great public exemplars, to consider in their migration between the drawing room and the dining room. Even as a blunder is held in politics and diplomacy to be worse than a crime, so, in society. Particularly in those homes of luxury which give the word and set to the phrases 'four hundred,' it is safer to commit a sin than to be detected in a solecism.

The president need not be reminded of this, for he knows it well. Nobody knows it better. But he is exceptional. Born with a ruffle around his neck and a gold spoon in his he grew up a filch from among his playthings a ticket calling for the capital prize in the lottery of life. Such a man is tempted to defy usage. He gets to be a law unto himself. We mourn for Booker Washington. He, it is on whom such consequences as befall this kindergarten lesson in the ethics of modern life are likely to fall. He, in the end, will, as it were, have to pay the freight.

"When Frederic Douglass married a white woman, his power was gone, it did not elevate him in the estimation of white men. It lost him caste among the people of his own race. Booker Washington, as head of the Tuskegee school, was admirable. As head, even of the kitchen cabinet, he is to be pitied. A red rag to racial prejudice, an object of envy to those blacks who are intelligent enough to differentiate, an offense to white republicans, an offense to white democrats in the South."

"Truly, the president did Booker Washington an ill turn in this business. Looking at it from a partisan point of view, democrats may take not a little comfort to themselves. What ever happens, this is not our funeral. Out in the cold as we may be—shivering as we are—and hungry, yea, verily, and thirsty—yet, as we stand around the White House and look in and see Teddy and Booker bobbing over their possum and potatoes, not one of us is disposed to envy either of them, or to exclaim of either, 'Wouldn't it be bully to be him?'"

We prefer to take our chances of the future. We had rather wait till our time comes. Somehow the look ahead does not seem so hopeless, nor the distance so long. For here there is a radical infirmity of judgment—a plain lack of common sense—and, bless the Lord, we are not in it. Indeed, the shortcoming implied by it means a great deal to us. Mistakes, like misfortunes, never come singly. They travel in groups and en masse. We democrats have but to get together and keep our powder dry to carry all before us three years hence, because this young man is a bronco buster, and he is going to raise more of the very hot place with the very short name to the square inch, than was ever raised in that particular neck of the woods. Sursum corda.

"There is a good time coming, boys; wait a little longer."
